Soviet Education

CPYRGHT

Allen Dulles, director of Central Intelligence, has found a hopeful sign in the mass education movement now underway in Russia. This is noteworthy because so many of our American educators have complained that the Russians are getting ahead of the United States, especially in connection with engineering training.

Dulles reports that Soviet leaders are undermining their own dictatorial control through improved education of the people. He says that in introducing mass education, the Soviet leaders have loosed forces dangerous to themselves.

Americans will hope that Dulles is correct when he says it will be difficult for the Russian leaders to close off their own people from access to realities of the world.
